

THE Clizbe Bros. Manufacturing Co., one of our best industries, was established here in 1899, coming from Chicago where it had operated with great success for several years previous thereto. Its business is the manufacture of Grinding Machinery of all kinds, and its products in this line are known throughout the country as of a high standard. In addition to a large variety of tools and machines of this kind for grinding and sharpening uses, the concern produces a number of other implements for the farm and factory, among these being the Crown Gasoline Engine, known throughout this locality as one of the best moderate priced engines for general use; a pumping jack, farmer's vise and drill, saw mandrels and sharpeners. Besides this line, which is sold to jobbers of machinery and supplies in every State in the Union as well as abroad, a large variety of hangers, pulleys and power transmission supplies are manufactured, and a general repair shop is operated. It is the local depot for castings, shafting, bolts, nuts, emery wheels, lubricating devices, gas engine and auto supplies. They have the exclusive agency for the well known Witherbee Ignition Devices, and the Monarch Carburetor.

Miss Southwick, Teacher of Room F
Much Pleased With Action of Her Pupil, and is Sure Great
Good Will Come From It.

When Miss Southwick, teacher of Room F, 4th grade scholars, in the city schools, heard the talk of Capt. Jack Crawford at the Presbyterian church Tuesday evening, she was impressed that certain of her boys, who are of the age when their minds are pliable, would be benefitted by a talk by the old army scout, and arranged through the intervention of Mr. George H. Thayer, to have him come and speak a few minutes to them Wednesday morning before his train to go away from the city. Miss Southwick sought to have her boys take an interest in the reformatory work of Capt. Jack, telling them that he was a man capable of doing things not common with one of his age, because he had always been an abstainer from the use of liquor and tobacco, and that his training as a soldier would lead him to notice a proper bearing on the part of the boys in every way seeking to impress them with the lessons that the lecturer would give them. After listening to Capt. Jack attentively, some of them wished to talk the subject over, but were restrained for the time. However, since the first of the present year, Miss Southwick has noticed a marked improvement in certain of her boys, and has had special reason to notice one boy, Fred Long by name. He seemed to have an earnestness and sense of responsibility above the average for his age, and had attracted her attention in a marked degree. Some time after Capt. Jack had gone, this boy approached his teacher, and asked to be allowed to go to Capt. Jack, as he wished to make a promise to him. The consent of Mr. McDowell, the Superintendent, was gained, and the boy found Capt. Jack at Leonard's Furniture store. Mr. Crawford says that he was writing at the desk when the boy approached, and turned and asked what he wanted. The lad replied that he had heard the talk at the school house, and wanted to make a promise to him never to smoke cigarettes, use intoxicants, or read dime novels. So Capt. Jack wrote out the following:

"This is to certify—
That Fred Long came to me at this store, having heard me at the school house half an hour ago, and said, Capt. Jack, I want to make a promise to you, that I will never smoke a cigarette, read a dime novel or drink anything that would intoxicate.
God bless the dear boy, and help him to keep his pledge.
J. W. Crawford,
(Capt. Jack.)
I certify that this is true, and I will keep my promise.
Fred Long."
Nov. 22, 1911, 10:30 a. m.

Mr. Crawford said that he intended writing a poem which he would dedicate to Fred Long, and have it placed in the front of one of his books of poems, sign it, and present the book to the boy.

How many of the citizens of Plymouth comprehend the value of the work being done by the teachers in our schools to fit the boys and girls for life a few years hence?

It was our good fortune to visit Miss Southwick, teacher of Room F, of the Washington school, and learn a little of the work she has to do. Besides having the care of her room, she has charge of the sewing work that is given the girls of several grades. She says people would be surprised to see the little dresses, aprons, and the fancy work, that is done by even small girls. It is not all play-work, but the goods are bought, and serviceable clothing for little children are made. The work is handed when finished, and graded the same as any study work. Neatness is urged, not by scolding and driving, but the effort is made to instill into the mind of each child that perfect work is the desired end. At times when a girl becomes careless, or shows a disposition to slight her work, the teacher sits down and does some of the article, explaining that the work should look like what she makes, and Miss Southwick says that often without being told the pupil will voluntarily take her work out and do it over.

One girl who was disposed to think that it made little difference how the work looked so it was done, has become one of the best in the grade, not by compulsion, but by being given to see the contrast. She made an apron, and the stitches were to Miss Southwick's eye, perfect, but in some way it had become soiled, and had to be washed to be presentable. This is against the usual order, as articles are passed on for grades as much for neatness as for perfect stitches, and this girl was not satisfied, but got new goods, and made a new apron, taking care to keep it unsoiled this time. This incident serves to show the principle that is being born in the girls—the desire to do work that is creditable in the highest degree.

This is a branch of what is call-
